

PRICES IN THE OLD WEST

Here is a fairly extensive list of prices for good in the Old West. Most of the credit for it should go to Stephen B. Mann, who went though an 1897 Sears catalog and compiled a list of prices. I tired to sort the list type of goods, and pick up where his left off and add in the things that were missing. The clip art not only breaks up all the dull dry lists, but can be used as an aide in finding a particular kind of product, hopefully making it a lot easier to find ammunition or a shovel.

PRICE INDEX

PRICES IN THE OLD WEST

Since this period covers a century or so, prices do fluctuate some over time. Fortunately for GMs and players, the purchasing power of a dollar remained remarkably stable from the period of 1840 through to 1910, with the notable, exception of the 1861-1880 period, thanks to the Civil War.

What that means for gamers is that for any campaign from 1840-1860 or from around 1882 to 1910 you can use the prices as listed. For other eras, a list of multipliers are given that reflect the prices of that time.

Era	Multiplier
	Rough	Detailed	Head
1800-1807
1807-1811	x2		subtract 10%
1812-1814 (War of 1812)	x2	x2.18	add 10%
1814-20 (post war)	1-.8
1821-30	x1.5		subtract 10%
1835-1838	x1.5		subtract 10%
1861-63 (ear war)	x2	x1.82	subtract 10%
1863-1865 (late war)
1865-1870 (post war)	x1.5	x1.45

To find a price for one of the era covered, simply multiply by one of the figures on the side. The rough conversion is easiest, but not as accurate. The detailed multiplier is more accurate but probably not something you can do in your head. The rough numbers are all with about 10% of the actual rate, so if you use the rough numbers, if you can (and want to) add or subtract 10% in your head, you will arrive at the same price you would get with the detailed multiplier.

Example-

Its 1863 and Sixgun Sam needs to buy a new Mackintosh. The GM notes that Men's Macks run from $2.95-$8.40.

1) Using the rough conversion, the GM multiplies the results in his head and comes up with a range of $5.90 (six buck) to $16.80 (seventeen bucks).

2) Using the detailed conversion (and a calculator) he comes up with $5.369 (rounds off to 5.37) to $15.288 (rounds to 15.29).

3) The GM uses The rough conversion to get $5.90-$16.80 as in #1, but takes off about 10% in his head for historical accuracy and gets $5.30-$15.10. Not bad for in his head.

Any of The methods is good enough for roleplaying purposes. In fact, a GM could simply use The prices below as listed, although for role-playing purposes it would probably be best to run some inflation during The Civil War era.

SUPPLY & DEMAND

There is an old adage that something is worth what you can get for it. It certainly holds true in The Old West. During much of The era, The region was sparsely settled and had few manufacturing centers. Most machined goods were shipped from back East. Depending on just how far "west" in the Old West someone was determined if such goods were transported by wagon, rail or, as if the case for much of California during the era, ship. A ship had to sail around Cape Horn from back East, a trip of several thousand miles.

Transporting goods costs money, especially across vast wild and dangerous distances. Someone has to pay for that cost, and ultimately, that means the people who end up buying the goods.

The prices below represent typical prices as would be paid in a city store or if ordered through The mail, sans postage. For items that need to be imported, the prices should be increased to twice or even three times what is listed below. If it is really out of the way or difficult to reach place, double or triple the prices again. Generally, if it is something that would be stocked, the price increase would be mitigated by The shopkeeper being able to import at his leisure, probably in bulk.

Perhaps nothing epitomizes the law of supply and demand more than the economies of Gold Rush towns, where eggs sold for $1 each, flour and sugar for $1.50 a pint, and coffee for $1 per pint.

On the positive side, in places where something is plentiful, the prices are much lower. For instance at time, bacon was so abundant at Fort Laramie bacon could be had at one cent a pound, and people literally were throwing it away.
